VISIONING HEALTHY RURAL COMMUNITIES

DREAM TO CHANGE THE FUTURE

We are striving to live in a democracy. A democracy is a politics that gives us the freedom to create our vision and the power to make that vision come true. We strive to be citizens -- people with the vision and the power to create our own way, a culture of community capacity, connection and care.
John McKnight

Visioning Healthy Rural Communities invites people from across the north of Scotland to coalesce around visions of positive change in health and social care within community settings. Telling the story of a vision can be a powerful means of communicating change. With skilled facilitators, inspirational speakers and collaborative thinking, participants of this innovative and thoughtful online programme will be guided to stand as their future selves, tell the story of their unique vision and create opportunities to hear and be heard from others with a diverse point of view.

The events of the last six months are not something any of us would have wished, but they have presented society with a unique opportunity for change. During the Second World War, a new post-war Britain was designed. Things like the NHS, national parks, the planning system and agriculture that could feed everyone were envisioned at the height of the conflict.

Are you ready to create your own vision for the future?

This innovative programme invites you to dream dreams about how you want society to be, develop creative ways of sharing that vision and explore making meaningful change in your community and Scottish rural life.
